Reymand shakes Trapsey's hand, "Congradulations." To all, "With Reymond's transfer to <whatevership it is>, Trapsey took over the job as First Officer. The promotion followed that."

He then walks back to the table and pulls some more small boxxes out of the bag, "Trapsey wasn't the only one who had his record examined closely." He waits for general reactions.

Akapella was too startled by Blackburn's pronouncement about Reymond's departure to react to the rest of his statement. What could have made him leave so abruptly? She wished she had had a chance to wish him well.

Akapella (distracted) ends.

"Congratulations Commander", came the sentiments to one side of Trapsey. It was Raban.

Trapsey leans slightly toward to Raban in response. "That's Captain to you now, Raban." He finished with a friendly smile back. As Blackburn seemed to be ready to unveil some more surprises, Trapsey was excused and resumed his seat, very lightheaded from the thrill of the moment and choked up over the thoughts of responsibility that had just been placed on his shoulders. A heavy burden, indeed. But what an honor, at the same time!

Someone slipped into the room as Blackburn continued his speech. The individual was partly masked by shadows, but Trapsey could make out what appeared to be a smiling expression.

Pete returned his gaze to Blackburn...wondering what's up.

The door to the room slipped open and a figure silently walked in, closing the door behind him and stood in the shadows.

A smile crosses the figure's face as Trapsey returns to his seat...more surprises were to come Marko James sits back and goes, "Eh?". She realizes that he just had a conversation with her about both being Lieutenant Commanders. Man, she thinks, this Admiral Blackburn might have a few loose marbles, that means he's a good one. Then she realizes, he did that intentionally, sly old bugger. She learned from Kirk long ago who quoth: "Lieutenant, the devil is in the... details. If... you... simultaneously consider the... big picture and every... less important detail... you... will... find that you have set a standard you won't be able to live with. You're... allowed to make mistakes. Just make sure that you specialize in the unimportant and... trivial ones." Hmm, she realized that she just thought in Kirk's catchy Shakespearean staccato. Picking up on the fact she was daydreaming, she turns her attention back to the confused meeting.

Pete:

I feel for you. When I was a young teen first driving (ok, 15 years ago) I hit at least 3 cats that darted in front of the car in my own neighborhood. Add to that the one kitten that decided to sleep on the fan belts (yucch.) Anyway, the family that was so uncivil should blame themselves. The cruelest thing to do to a dog is to let it roam in this modern age. It exposes them to rabies, sickness, traffic, other dogs, cats, people who poison pets and other terrible possibilites. Dogs, unlike cats, are perfectly able to live in close quarters, kennels, houses, backyards, and on humane ropes and chains. Don't let any of their uncivility hit you, as frankly, a 4-year old child will run into the street too if not kept an eye upon.

as for losing players, we all go through that during this time of year. juan was no exception. if you feel the need, why not advertise for new players? you still have a very strong core group. as for dennis, i know that if he somehow gets access, he will return.

for which list are you looking? i don't have one for either game. you could send a "who <listname>" command to majordomo for either one.

OOC: Actually, Ron, I was just going to pretend that the Captain thing didn't really occur. It was just a player blunder (we all do 'em) and we can get things back on track by just assuming that Trapsey graciously accepted his Commander's pins, and was not mistakenly given Captain's pins.

Besides, he would have been an unusually young Captain. :-)

The rank of Commander is big shoes to fill as it is! After all, what post did Riker hold for so long? (question answers itself)

The now-official Commander Trapsey takes his seat and watches the rest of the proceedings with a newfound interior smile.

i'd like to do something, but remember that defiant is caught up in the fed/cardie war. they would not be able to just "take leave." if we could work out something with dennis and the others, something that could be fed into the storyline, i'd be game.

nope. remember that rich was about to write him out and promote bedru when briggs suddenly came back to life. i don't know what to suggest to you. i do know that i eventually had to take him off khawk because of his disappearances.

What about asking Anthony to take over???? He's an awesome GM...) I love GM'ing but as I've discovered on Venture, its a pain to play/gm at the same time...

Well...my decision...he won't play on Venture. His dissapearances make him undependable for continuity in game play. Not even going to ask him.

Subject: ven: did someone ask about uniform colors?

PJ style (as seen in ST:TMP)

Color-coding is as follows:

White: Command
Red: Engineering
Orange: Science
Yellow: Operations (Helm, navigation, communications, and transporter chief had this color in the movie).
Green: Medical
Blue: Unknown; wasn't seen in movie (is being used by the jag in khawk)
Grey: Security
Black: Intelligence

Belt-buckle thing was described as a bio-monitor, which kept the Sickbay computers constantly updated as to the condition of the wearer.

Also, the wrist communicators are in use.

Subject: Re:A slight ooc Re:VEN: Trapsey ooc

since we've going with the pj uniform of st:tmp, rank designation was not the pins of tng, or even the bar types thingies of st:ii+. i believe they still used a band designation around the bottom of the uniform sleeve, similar to tos.
randye

(Note from the Kitty Hawk Technical Consultant:)

The TMP uniforms utilized both sleeve braid and shoulder tab rank designations. Being Engineering, Trapsey would have red shoulder tabs with two solid slashes to indicate Cmdr. (or one broken, one solid for Lt. Cmdr.) Boulay would have two solid, one broken for Captain, on white for Command.

The shoulder tabs and circle beneath the Starfleet arrow symbol are the the only areas that show the color designation. Randye has the list of color codes.

(Now, in character)

Nick smiled at Pete. "Congratulations." he said. He looked back to Blackburn, waiting for the next order of business. Outwardly he was calm, but inside he was anxious for the meeting to end.
